A new tool will soon become available to those with life-threatening illness or injury and their loved ones. It is called the STAR SYSTEM.

The project offers a means whereby the individual can reduce dramatically the common fear of physical death. The result can be at the least, greater tolerance of the situation, including awareness that humans are indeed more than their physical bodies. At most, the STAR SYSTEM user may learn to control willfully and calmly the sequence of physical death.

Concurrently, STAR SYSTEM helps loved ones understand and accept the physical death process so as to provide badly needed specific support at critical moments. It also includes methods that can be employed to help family and friends consistently adjust to and recover from the loss of their devoted one.

STAR SYSTEM is a series of audio learning exercises on cassette tape or compact disc(CD), designed for use at home, in hospitals, hospices and nursing case facilities. It utilizes the Hemi-Sync sound technology developed by the Monroe Institute over the past thirty years.

The Project was organized by three world leaders in human life and death: Elisabeth Kubler-Ross,MD,PHD, author and lecturer, international authority on death and dying, Charles Tart,PHD, author, lecturer, university professor, authority on human consciousness, and Robert Monroe, author, researcher in states of consciousness, and creator of several hundred learning systems using audio technology.
